Volume 37 no. 3, le lundi 20 octobre 1997

Journal bilingue de Glendon

Le gouvernement provincial a créé un fonds spécial d'une valeur de 500 000$ qui aidera les jeunes entrepreneurs francophones âgés de 18 à 29 ans à former des partenariats et à réaliser des projets de nature commerciale. Une copie du dépliant sur le fonds paraîtra dans les journaux de langue française dans les prochaines semaines.

Patricia Poulin, a Glendon student, was one of 20 young Canadians selected to receive the Canada Trust Scholarship for Outstanding Community Leadership. Poulin's concern for people in her community through her involvement with the St. John Ambulance, a suicide prevention center and a peer support and guidance group, which she founded earned her the scholarship. Each Canada Trust Scholarship is valued at over $40,000 and includes full tuition for up to four years.

Recently, the Faculty of Education at York announced that the Concurrent Education program at Glendon was to be abolished. 29 Glendon students are currently enrolled in the program and over 100 apply each year. This decision was made without the consultation of the Glendon Administration or students. Continuation on page 3.

Letters to the editor

éditorial

Let's just say that my grandfather died.

Tragic. But fortunately for me, I was his favourite grandson. "Fortune", because he was extremely wealthy, "fortunate" because I (being the favourite) was entitled to a large amount of his estate.

Now in those days, I was an aggressive business minded eager young entrepreneur. Investing my time and money, I eventually established a little business making toys for little pre-schoolers. Not too bad, eh? I was doing pretty well for myself, eh? Using my deceased grandfather's money to make toys for little children made me think of my grandfather and how he used to play with me and my toys.

Now this little business of mine took off, like I mean TOOK OFF! Parents were buying my toys like there was no tomorrow. The fad of the 80's. So, being a business minded individual, I invested the money. A couple of factories and some specialized stores didn't cost too much money back then.

But I really liked the toys idea - putting smiles on kids faces and all - so I thought I would expand my market to cartoons and television. Since I had made a lot of money and was still continuing to do so, I thought I'd buy a television network. Now buying out a television network was a very simple task at that time since the market at that time was unstable (ie. the previous owners were going bankrupt at the time). At the end of it all, I ended up owning three linked networks as well as being a major shareholder in the other four majors. In addition to this, the previous owners had sold me some radio stations. Now this wasn't too bad at all. I was doing pretty well for myself, eh? Thinking about this, in retrospect, it all went by so quickly, it seemed so easy. Luckily, I was the first one to have thought of it. I was ready to have a party. And so I did.

I had an extremely large party and invited several presidents, prime ministers, some royalty, and other wealthy and influential figures (not to mention a couple of old friends, but not too many, I didn't want to look bad). Surprisingly, everyone I sent invitations to, came (or at least sent a delegate to attend). Everybody had heard of ME and all the great work I had done and I felt really accomplished. I was doing pretty well for myself.

From this party, I had made a substantial amount of contacts, friends. Now one of these friends was heavily involved with newspaper and print media. He told me that we could put together our resources to completely run the entire media sector. This seemed like a good idea since I was making money from Myself already through advertising in My own television and radio stations, the expansion to newspapers and magazines just made sense. Not too bad eh grandpa? I was doing pretty well for Myself.

Then, a fairly young and enthusiastic employee of Mine (who reminded Me of Myself), came to me with a proposal. I didn't quite understand his plan, because it involved complex chemistry and waste disposal stuff (I had dropped out of high school to start my toy business), but he said it was going to save Me almost half the cost of My toy-making. So I set him in charge of the project, and sure enough, My production costs were half the original costs. I was doing pretty well for Myself, I thought.

Recently, there have been all kinds of hippie environmental groups on My back about some thing or another. I figure they're just jealous of My success. But of course, I don't really have much to worry about since they'll never make the mainstream news because I pretty much own the media. So, I figure I'm doing pretty well for MYSELF, eh? Imagine the possibilities.

Our innocuous editors

This week, Pro Tem celebrates its one-week anniversary (weekaversary?) as an entirely English newspaper. The problem is that nobody's celebrating. Our conversion to unilinguallsin was entirely unintentional. In fact, we are all rather depressed and paranoid about the situation.

Case in point - Joel Ramirez.

For those of you unfamiliar with the personalities of Pro Tem, Joel, along with Jane Gorley, is our co-editor-in-chief, and is accordingly responsible for fulfilling of all of Pro Tem's requirements as Glendon's bilingual biweekly. He also has an iron grip.

One day last week, Joel came up to me, seized my shoulders, and moaned "Rae, what is with me? Why can I not bring in any francophone writers? Do they think I'm scary?" I was struck by the absurdity of his last comment. Joel is an Elmo among GI Joes; a pigeon among vultures; yogourt among, uh, more threatening dairy products. But how to publicize his endearing innocence?

How to convey to Monsieur or Madame Francophone of their safety in his presence?

In the spirit of revealing the truth of this complex gentleman who quietly and desperately keeps you informed every couple of weeks, I conducted an interview that will reveal precisely his scariness quotient. And I threw in Jane for fun.

Q - Joel/Jane, you're the sweetest, prettiest, least objectionable boy/girl I've ever known. Why would anybody, francophone or otherwise, think you're scary?

A - Joel - I don't know. It might be my nervous twitch. Sometimes when I talk, I 'erk my head to one side. (He shows me. I am terrified.) But it's completely genetic; I had no choice in the matter. My choice of shoes is a little odd sometimes, too.

A - Jane - Because I'm big but my heart is big too.

Q - But everybody's got something in their past - a scary episode they'd wish to forget. Best to come clean now.

A - Joel - I once did something-really bad to a snail. It involved masked men, horseradish and concentrated beams of light.

A - Jane - (Too pure and lily-white to think of a response)

Q - Growl.

A - Joel - (Cannot muster a sound. How's that for nonthreatening?)

A - Jane - (Sedately; Bigfoot dulled by anaesthetic) grrr...

Q - Show me your meanest face.

A - (both blush)

Q - Can you think of any fuzzy anecdote from your past that might convince people that you are as congenial as you claim?

A - Joel - No, but people like to rub my belly. You can too, if you like (I pleasantly rub his belly).

A - Jane - Once helped a kitten cross the road to the safety of its mother on the other side. Then I bought the whole family some Fancy Feast.

Q - You see a yapping, chow-chow slowly drowning in suds at your local laundromat. What is your gut response?

A - Joel - (fainting and tears) uh..

A - Jane - I would save the dog, blowdry it, and then feed the kitten to it.

Q - Have you ever, even once, used the hopping F-word in reference to a francophone?

A - Joel - No, I withstood enough locker room taunts of my own physical deformities to know what it is like to be categorized as an amphibian.

A - Jane - No, and I understand their pain; the hopping F-word stung me, as a French student, all through High School.

So there they are, naked before you. Our insipid, lame, completely inoffensive editors who will let you stomp all over them if you'll write in French. So, francophones, bring your steel-toed boots and come on in!

To the editors,

In response to the new "She said, he said" advice column: What century are these so-called advisors living in? It is commendable that these two have the desire to help and guide their fellow students, but pity the soul who takes their backwater advice.

"I'm not sexist, but..." Any sentence that begins with that line clearly comes from a Neanderthal. When is the last time you heard someone say, "I'm not racist, but..."

And, "...you should thank God that you have a boyfriend that cares enough not to get you pregnant." Because we all know that men are uncaring pigs with only one thing on their minds.

If that's not enough, "She" claims that a sex partner is "looking out for you" by pulling out and not ejaculating inside of her. But no mention is made of using condoms, which would be the safe and logical solution to this problem.

These people are equally offensive to both sexes, and I hope that anyone reading their advice takes it with several grains of salt.

Concurrent Education squeezed out of Glendon

Continuation from News In Brief... A large percentage of the present Glendon population has been affected by the cancellation of the Concurrent Education program. Now Glendon students enrolled in the program must travel to the Keele Campus. Students living in residence have to use one of only three buses that leave Glendon every day.

Louise Lewin, Associate Principal, Recruitment and Student Affairs has commented to Pro Tem on the student situation: "The cancellation of the concurrent education program affects students academically, as they may not always be able to enroll in courses offered at Glendon because of time constraints." Adding to the problems facing Con. Ed. students, there was no effort made to make the transition easy from Glendon to the Keele campus. Students reported that they were not consulted before the change was made. Therefore, students did not have the opportunity to make adjustments to their schedules in advance.

Lewin said that the cancellation will also affect the College as a whole with respect to enrollment and student retention. Glendon is a small environment with only about 2000 students. This change could potentially remove a large chunk of the student population from the college.

The opportunity existed for provisions to be made to facilitate the continuation of the concurrent education program at Glendon.

Such as, using the video conferencing technology between both campuses enabling Glendon students to follow the lectures from Glendon College. The professors could still teach from York Keele campus and Glendon students could benefit from them without having to physically attend their lectures.

The cancellation of the Concurrent Education program has had and will continue to have a serious effect on Glendon. Not only will it reduce enrollment, but it will also mean that Glendon may lose many valuable members of the student community to other faculties at the Keele campus. Today the education, what will it be tomorrow?

A new fund for young entrepreneurs launched

Continuation from News in Brief... Launched earlier this month the Economic Development Fund reflects joint consultation from the private and public sector to Franco-Ontarian businesses.

Mr. Noble A. Villeneuve, Minister Responsible for Francophone Affairs said at the launch "This is an opportunity for us to encourage young Francophones to promote their skills and contribute to their region's economy."

An external committee will be formed to evaluate submissions and make recommendations. Approved projects will be funded on a variable cost-shared basis. The first deadline for submissions is November 15, 1997. Jean Watters, President of College Boreal commented "Ontario's young Francophones are ready to tackle the challenges they face in their career planning and job market integration. We must help them to realize their potential."

"We must help them to realize their potential."

Mr. Villeneuve also suggested that the objective of the Fund is to recognize the true added value of French-language and bilingual resources in Ontario. A copy of the Fund flyer will be included in French-language newspapers within the next few weeks.

The Graduate

Stephanie Sleightholm

"Yes, that's right. Stephanie. With a P-H. Yes. Sleightholm. S as in Sam, L-E-I, G-H-T, H-O-L-M as in Mary. Yes. My address? Certainly..." From here, I proceed to give the remaining information to the strange voice in a strange province on the other end of the telephone line.

In only one paragraph, I have illuminated, for your reading pleasure, the first crucial step for all potential graduate studies applicants: The Telephone Olympics. This synopsis may appear simple, but if it does, it is deceptively so. A few weeks ago, I managed to lose the greater part of a Friday because a telephone receiver was stuck to the side of my head. That was only the beginning.

I thought the phone calls would be a breeze. All I would have to do is dial and talk. In a reductive sense, yes, that is what I did. But exponentially, the Olympics involve much more. First, for example, I had to find out what phone numbers to call. (Oh, what a strenuous task. I'll bet everyone's feeling sympathy pains now.) Some people at the Counselling and Career Centre kindly assisted me by providing a book listing all Canadian universities and their respective phone numbers. Sadly, when I tried calling the numbers, I realized how terribly out of date the book was. Note to self: in spare time, try to organize a protest demanding more funding for the C.C.C.

Ultimately, I was transferred back and forth (while paying peak long distance fees, I might add) between offices, desks, and departments. Most schools managed eventually to connect me to an appropriate person whereby I would provide, as exemplified above, my vital statistics. Sometimes, though, I completely failed even to contact a real person (so if anyone in my reading audience has any information about applying to Dalhousie, please feel free to drop it off at the Pro Tem office).

Eventually, my Friday of phone calls ended and within a few days, big brown envelopes began shooting through my mail slot. (I'm sure the letter carrier hates me.) I now have a pile of application packages that stands about as high as my bed and twice as wide. It is an extremely daunting stack of papers. Each envelope holds within it a secret, foreign world; a world in which I could be living by this time next year. And the most frightening aspect of this world is that it is my responsibility to learn all about it—especially how I might become an inhabitant—with the brown envelope as my only guide. Essentially, my future now depends on a big pile of paper. I guess I should keep flame out of my room for the next few months.

Now I am stuck. I have a grand pile of application packages, but nothing else. I don't, for example, know exactly what I want to study, but in order to apply, I must. Schools require (gasp!) a one page statement of intent from every student. I also don't know how to narrow down my list of choice schools. It can cost a heck of a lot to apply to each school ($60.00 for the initial application, $20.00 for a housing application, plus additional fees for transcripts, phone calls, mailings, etc.) so while this decision is a life-altering one, I must be somewhat selective or I won't even be able to afford a school should I be accepted. And I can't help but let my consumerist mind wander to the cool things I could purchase with all of that money.

Finally, and this is the part I dread the most, I have to find three professors who are willing to write letters of reference for me. Granted, I am extremely thankful that I am a Glendon student—at least my profs know my name. But I'm still quite intimidated by the prospect of approaching them. It isn't very often (apart from the odd deadline extension request, that is) that students have to ask professors for favours. But, as everyone keeps assuring me, they're accustomed to it.

And they've no doubt had to make the same angst-ridden requests at some point in their academic careers. Yeah, that's the ticket. I'll approach the professors by appealing to the fact that at some point in their lives, they've been in the same torturous situation. Don't they want to help me out of mine? Perfect.

From where I stand, the process of applying to grad school seems impossible, but I know that it can't kill me (can it?). A panoply of eager undergraduates before me have survived the stressful task and now it is my turn. I am scrambling madly to solve the mysteries that present themselves to me as I travel the winding road of the grad school applicant. It is, I'm sure, a rite of passage that is meant to be more fulfilling than frustrating, but I have yet to reach that desired conclusion. Until I do, I will continue to write letters, send e-mails, read brochures, and make countless long distance telephone calls... "Stephanie. With a P-H. Sleightholm. S as in Sam, L-E-I, G-H-T, H-O-L-M as in Mary." I'm crossing my fingers for some sort of grad school epiphany. And I promise, if it happens, I'll let you know.

Construct this, buddy

Elise Gatti

So I was running down a street in my neighbourhood the other day, as I often do, and I was subjected to a denigrating comment. Just like that, in broad daylight, by a construction worker. Now I'm not naive; I often get stares from male passersby in cars, for example. But an actual verbal assault from an identifiable person who could not drive away?

Disgusted and caught unaware, I offered a short rebuke as I strode by, determined to continue enjoying an energizing autumn run in a beautifully treed neighbourhood. By the time I reached the end of the road however, I was seething. The mood was ruined and I wasn't going to get back that carefree and independent feeling, so I headed for a long loop back to the site, full of adrenaline and angry responses to the "ungentleman".

As I neared the site, I was running strong. Chin up and straight-backed until I reached the caravan of parked trucks and equipment, where I then slowed to a walk. No use in giving him twice the satisfaction. I walked up to the small group of workers and proceeded to tell the offender that I was insulted by his remark, that I was going to report the company to the city (they were doing road work paid for by the public) and that he had ruined a damn fine run.

The contractor, hearing the protestations came over and inquired about the commotion, so I repeated what would be the first order on my agenda the following morning. He wasn't happy but that's too bad. It's a sad fact that an employer would have to specifically warn his staff not to harass people while on the job, but then again, the construction business sort of has a reputation. Maybe the next time this employer will give his new employee (male or female), along with their hard hat and gloves, a reminder that sexual harassment is illegal and won't be tolerated.

As for the future, will I seek a male running companion for protection from unwanted comments? Forget it. The next time it happens, and if past experiences mean anything it will, I will tell them what it means to me and what I will do about it, and then leave them in my dust.

Student loans can't be released through bankruptcy for two years

Jen Horsey

TORONTO (CUP) — Recent changes to legislation have added student loans to a short list of debts not released through bankruptcy.

Students declaring bankruptcy within two years of completing or discontinuing their studies will no longer be released from paying back their student loan debt unless they can successfully prove to the courts that special circumstances apply in their case.

NDP federal youth critic Libby Davies says she thinks it's outrageous that the government is singling out students for this special treatment, adding that this measure disregards the underlying problem of increasing student debt.

"I think it is totally discriminatory by singling students out and saying, 'You're not allowed to do this,'" she said.

Naomi Ridout, senior policy analyst for the Canada Student Loans Program, says she supports the changes. She says she doesn't think students should have to resort to bankruptcy to take care of their student loans.

According to Ridout, measures such as the six-month grace period after a student leaves school when they are not required to make payments on their loan, and the further 30 month period of interest relief address the problems students have with their student loan debts.

"We have protected students from the need to default on their loans," she said.

Ridout says she is concerned that students are declaring bankruptcy without considering other options, and she says the problem is that information about the loan program's flexibility is not getting out to students, or the private lending institutions who administer the loans.

But Jessica Yateman says she felt she had no choice but to default on her student loan, and she did so one week before the changes came into effect.

She was in school for two years, didn't have a degree, and had accumulated a debt of nearly $23,000. Her job conducting market research studies didn't pay enough to cover her $300 monthly student loan payments and her future didn't look much better.

"I'm so young, I want something to look forward to," Yateman said, adding that over the next eight or nine years, her student loan payments would likely have prohibited her from investing in an RRSP, a car or a house.

Over the next nine months, her assets will be controlled by a trustee. At the end of nine months, she will be released from bankruptcy and has a chance to start over — almost.

For the next seven years a record of her bankruptcy will mar her credit history, making it difficult to attain any credit.

Although government figures show that 80 per cent of students pay their loans off on time and in full, student bankruptcies have almost tripled since 1993, rising to 12,000 in 1996 from 4,500.

The high number of student bankruptcies are a sign student debt is rising out of control, Randy Miller, vice-president external of the Memorial University student union, says.

"I don't know when they are going to realize students cannot pay off $45,000 debts," he said. "They can't do it."

"Progressive thinking would say, 'Gee all these students are declaring bankruptcy. It can't be just because they don't want to pay off their loans. It must be because they can't pay it off,'" he said. "So government turns around and instead of attacking the issue... they go the other way and say they're criminals."

Other debts which cannot be cleared by bankruptcy include fines imposed by courts, money owed for things stolen and alimony or maintenance payments. With files from the Muse and the Varsity

Women's centre opposed to pro-life group on Memorial campus

Kelli Kieley

ST. JOHN'S (CUP) — The possibility that a campus pro-life group may get full recognition from Memorial University's student union has raised concerns at the school's women's centre.

The student group MUN For Life is currently being recognized on a trial basis by the student union and will be eligible for full recognition during the winter semester.

During the trial period groups are allowed to operate on campus and establish a presence, through things like information booths. Once a group is granted full recognition it automatically gets money from the union and is able to apply for special project grants and office space.

Abortion is a complex and emotional issue for women and the presence of a pro-life group on campus will add to anxiety for women who face, or have already faced, this decision, Gloria Williams, a spokesperson for the Memorial University Women's Resource Centre, said.

"This is the hardest decision a woman will ever have to make in her life," she said. "Nobody wants to have an abortion."

"When we have organizations that put pressure and more strain on these women who are already undergoing enormous strain and stress, it's really scary for them."

Williams says student union support for the group will reinforce the negative associations society already attaches to abortion. "There is a lot of stigma attached to abortion in our society and we don't need a group that promotes it on campus," she said. "It doesn't create an atmosphere for choice. The university should not promote biases that exist in our culture."

Mike Down, president of MUN For Life, says his group does not condemn women who have chosen to have an abortion.

"Our group is totally non-condemnatory and non-judgmental," he said. "Any woman who has had an abortion... if we can do anything to help whatsoever, then we would be happy to do whatever we can to provide her with the help she needs."

Down says MUN For Life is primarily interested in helping deserving groups that support pro-life policies.

MUN for Life has a right to form on campus, student union vice-president Karen Kieley says, as long as they do not attempt to counsel students on abortion matters.

"Within Canadian democracy, everybody has the right of free speech," she said.

Kieley says when the union first debated whether to grant MUN for Life trial status, there was a fair amount of disagreement on the issue.

"There was a lot of debate on [the union] as to whether or not this would be a good thing for the university, and I think that right now MUN For Life does have to prove to students on campus that it is a worthwhile group and that it deserves a place in the university community," she said.

Kieley adds that she hopes MUN

For Life will not focus strictly on anti-abortion issues.

The women's centre is also wary of the pro-life group because of literature it distributed on campus last winter that it says contained inaccurate information and provoked guilt.

Entitled "Should Rape be an Argument for Abortion?" the pamphlet indicated that there have never been any reports of pregnancy resulting from rape.

"The possibility of pregnancy is reduced even more by the severe stress reaction related to assault rape," the pamphlet read in part.

Down says circulating the pamphlet was an oversight on his part and adds that the group will, in the future, more carefully screen any literature it distributes.

Three university football players test positive for steroids

Rachel Furey

TORONTO (CUP) — Three Canadian university football players have been forced to hang up their cleats after testing positive for steroids.

Mathieu Demers of the Saint Mary's Huskies, Shawn Dyson of the Waterloo Warriors and Constanin Shousha of the Ottawa Gee-Gees were all tested during random, unannounced sessions in September. All three have admitted to using steroids and have waived their right to a second test.

The Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union announced on Monday that each player has been suspended for a period of no less than four years.

"I made the mistake because I was impatient to reach the top. I regret it and I must now live with my decision. I am human and I wanted to be the best. I am sorry," Demers said in a statement released later in the week.

Since 1990, approximately 2,250 drug tests have been conducted and 20 athletes have tested positive. All but one of the cases has involved a football player and steroid use.

With these latest infractions, the preventative measures used to keep players from taking steroids are being called into question.

"With three players [testing positive] in the same week, there's something wrong," Luc Gelineau, University of Ottawa athletics director, said.

The CIAU currently conducts mandatory drug education seminars for athletes each year. Players must sign a form to indicate they've read and understood the union's zero tolerance policy on drug use.

In light of the recent tests the CIAU will meet with the schools involved and with the Canadian Centre for Ethics in Sport to examine what more can be done, Diane St-Denis, CIAU director of events and programs, says.

"Perhaps there's another strategy we can use to get the message across," she said.

While this may sit well with Gelineau, who wants to develop a method for monitoring athletes during the off-season, others say the current standards are strict enough.

"We're very aggressive about our testing. We have probably the toughest sanctions in the world," Larry Uteck, head coach of the Saint Mary's Huskies, said. "I believe we need a severe penalty, [I] support the rules and sanctions, but how big of a hammer do you need?"

Meanwhile the announcement has hit hard at the University of Waterloo where the suspended player, Dyson, was the team's captain.

"This is the second time it has happened at Waterloo in the past five years. It's extremely disappointing," said Judy McCrae, director of athletics at the University of Waterloo.

Dyson, a fifth-year science student, told his coach that he took the steroids "to get an edge" for a Canadian Football League training camp he was invited to attend in Calgary.

All three players told their coaches they didn't expect to test positive for the drugs.

"[Shousha] was told by his supplier the drug would be out of his system and he was shocked to see that it was still there," said Gelineau.

SEX-FILES

by Denise Alevizos

Most of us have had the knowledge of the birds and the bees for quite some time now; some of us have more knowledge about the subject than others. Wherever you fall in the spectrum, it is never a bad idea to introduce/brush up on the ideas and facts that influence every aspect of our society. So for both the sex-ed virgins (excuse the pun!) and those guys and gals who know it all, welcome everyone to the Sex-Files, because remember folks, the cliché is true: knowledge is power.

FACT #1

If the tightly coiled seminiferous tubules (which produce the male sperm) were stretched, they would extend one to three feet in length.

Testes: the testes are egg shaped structures located in the scrotum/sac and is where sperm and hormones are produced. The testes are outside the body as opposed to inside the abdominal cavity because it is cooler and higher, hotter temperatures would destroy the sperm. The sperm is produced inside the testes in the seminiferous tubules.

FACT #2

The Cowper's gland also contains a small number of sperm, and this pre-ejaculatory fluid can impregnate a woman, even if the man withdraws before ejaculation takes place.

Epididymus: The epididymus beside the testes acts like a storage unit for sperm before it is ejected in the process of ejaculation. Its smooth walls contract during ejaculation and moves the sperm into a connecting tube, or vas deferens.

FACT #3

Not all sperm race to fertilize the eggs. There are three varieties of sperm. While the first attempts to reach the egg for the purpose of fertilization, the second links with other sperm of its sort to form a barrier or wall against foreign sperm. The third acts as a sort of warrior sperm, trying to seek out and destroy other men's sperm.

Vas deferens: It is in the two vas deferens where sperm combines with fluid from the prostate gland to produce the semen that enters the urethra.

FACT #4

The average menstrual cycle lasts 28 days, with a normal range of 21-35 days. The first menstrual day is numbered as Day 1. Ovulation occurs approximately on day 14 of the 28 day cycle.

FACT #5

Women do not urinate out of their vagina as many men believe, but out of a third opening called the urinary opening, which connects to the urethra, acting as a carrier for urine as in the male urethra.

FACT #6

Many women (and men) expect the first intercourse to be painful because they fear the breaking of the hymen, but such pain most likely results because the female is anxious and unprepared, or the male's penetration is clumsy or forced, not the breaking of the hymen.

Ejaculate: The average male ejaculate contains from 200 to 400 million sperm, though these account for only 1% of the total volume of the semen. Semen contains fluid from the epididymus, the seminal vesicles, the prostate gland, and the Cowper's gland. These glands help neutralize the acidity of the urine in the urethra, making it possible for the sperm to survive and be mobile.

MALE*Male Erection and Ejaculation

The penis includes 2 cylinders, corpora cavernosa, which have tissue-like cells with spaces between them. Arousal causes these spaces to fill with blood.

Urethra: The male urethra serves a double purpose. Like the female urethra it functions as a carrier of urine but uniquely, the male urethra also serves as a carrier of sperm during ejaculation.

Case No. 69

Ovaries: Ovaries are oval-shaped organs hugged by the ends of the fallopian tubes. The ovaries are the female counterpart to the male testes, both producing reproductive cells (in the case of the ovaries, they produce eggs/ova) and both secrete hormones. It is here in the ovaries then that the ovarian follicles are found (230,000-400,000 of them at birth), each with an immature egg in their centre, and from puberty to menopause usually one is released each month into the fallopian tube.

Fallopian Tubes: The fallopian tubes are connected to the uterus. When the ovary releases an egg, it enters the fallopian tube and its cilia (hairlike structures) guide the egg through the tube, into the uterus. The fallopian tube also assists the journey of the egg with contractions used to move the egg along. It is here in the fallopian tubes, near the entrance closest to the ovaries where fertilization takes place between the egg and the sperm.

FACT #7

Menstrual cramps are caused by chemical substances called prostaglandins, that produce contractions of the smooth muscles of the uterus.

FEMALE

FACT #8

Disease-causing organisms can be transmitted during all acts of sex, including anal and oral sex.

Uterus: The uterus is located in the pelvic cavity between the bladder and the rectum. The walls of the uterus are partially composed of smooth muscles that contract during orgasm, childbirth, and menstruation.

FACT #9

Achieving orgasm involves both physical and psychological factors.

Cervix: The cervix is at the lower end of the uterus extending into the vagina. It is here in the cervix through a small opening or mouth (the os) that the sperm can enter the uterus to make their way to the fallopian tubes to find the egg. This mouth/os is also the opening in which childbirth takes place, stretching 10x its size through which the baby can fit. The mouth/os is also the site where the eager sperm meet one of their many hurdles. Mucus plugs the entrance of the cervix and forms a barrier for the sperm for most of the monthly menstrual cycle, only thinning and becoming permeable during ovulation, which occurs on day 14 of the 28 day cycle.

FACT #10

Some females are born with a partial or no hymen. Hymen: a membrane found only in human females that covers the opening of the vagina at birth.

FACT #11

The female reproductive system undergoes only two processes, menstruation and childbirth, exclusive to the female. All other physiological processes are shared in common between the sexes.

FACT #12

The earliest aphrodisiacs were certain edible foods thought to resemble human sex organs: clams, oysters, bananas, rhino horns, etc.

FACT #13

The Oral Contraceptive Birth Control Method - the pill, works because it tricks the body into thinking it is already pregnant, therefore the body does not release an egg.

Clitoris: The clitoris is composed of two small erectile, cavernous bodies enclosed in a fibrous membrane and ending in a gland (an exposed head; the counterpart to the male penile gland/or head). Like the penile gland the clitoris is intensely, erotically sensitive.

Labia: Labia Majora: the outer lips covering the external genitalia; akin to the scrotum;

Labia Minora: the inner lips; the inner covering of the entrance to the vagina.

Vulva: Vulva is the term generally used to describe the external genitalia which includes: Mons pubis: the fatty tissue atop the female pubic bone;

To feel comfortable and in control of one's self, one should know how his/her body works. To have sexual intercourse and to enjoy it makes this knowledge a necessity. Men and women alike should delve into the mysterious body to understand theirs and each other's temples, and more importantly perhaps even understand each other in the process.

She said, he said

DISCLAIMER: Not a professional opinion, not the opinion of the editors.

PROBLEM: I am a student at Glendon who has been really let down by a former friend. You see, last year she was really great to hang out with and this year she has become rude and mean. I don't want to stop hanging out with her because we have had many great times together, yet I can't be around someone who is obnoxious for very long.

SHE: Sounds to me like you already have your answer about this ex-friend. Who wants to hang out with someone that is rude to others?.. Not me that's for sure, and I don't think you do either. It's hard coming to terms with the fact that someone you thought you knew has changed or really isn't the person you thought they were. I'd say that before you let this friend move on you might want to talk the situation over. Find out what's different about them, and then make a decision whether you want to stay clear or move the friendship to the next gear!

HE: Drop her like a bad habit! I'm sorry, but anyone who doesn't treat you the way you think you deserve to be treated isn't worth the time of day - at least not mine anyways. Some people just have too much time on their hands and find it fun to be mean and obnoxious. One word: LOSER!

PROBLEM: I'm in my second year of study, at Glendon, and I'm concerned about Law School. I'm not sure how to go about Law school. I'm not sure how to go about applying and the various processes involved. I realize this is not a conventional question or problem but I'm stumped. Do you have any knowledge on this subject?

SHE: As a matter of fact I do happen to know a bit on this subject. But I'm unsure as to exactly what you are asking. If your concern is what it takes to get in, it depends on where you are applying but basically you need a 'B' average. For places like Osgoode or McGill you need a solid 'A'. You should go to the Counselling centre and pick up the L-SAT (Law School Admissions Test) booklet and get moving on taking the test A.S..A.P., because you can rewrite it if you don't do so well. After the test you can apply to schools wherever you wish, however it is very costly to apply. Keep your marks up, and the year before you want to attend Law School you should inform yourself about the schools even more.

HE: Good thing there is a 'SHE' in He Said, She Said because don't have a clue.

PROBLEM: My boyfriend is addicted to TV. More specifically to wrestling and channel 30, TSN. It drives me crazy, when the TV is on I don't exist. I swear I could run around screaming "Fire" and he wouldn't even flinch. How is this fair? I never ignore him especially not for anything as trivial as wrestling. Does this mean he lacks interest in me?

SHE: Honey, I completely understand where you're coming from. I've had a few fights myself about 'Bad Blood' and 'The Blue Jays' with my boyfriend. All I can say is, yes, it is frustrating when you think 'Steve Austin' is more interesting to your boyfriend than you are, but the truth is, he is. Sorry to say but guys need that macho stuff to feel like real guys. Don't take it personally, just live with it and be thankful he's not addicted to 'Baywatch'.

HE: I disagree. When you are concentrating on something, do you not put 100% of your mind into it? If you are following a sports team or the storyline of a soap do you not like to follow it as much as possible? Whether you follow baseball, golf or ballet, people, male or female, are going to devote some attention to it. I don't know to what extent your boyfriend ignores you, but personally my girlfriend has shown interest in some of the sports that I enjoy and that has really made baseball games a lot more interesting and fun. Try and show interests in what he likes and you'll find things will change.

CONSPIRACY THEORY OF THE WEEK

So restauronics is opening the famous Bistro for lunches. New chairs, new paint, new staff and, surprisingly, a new menu! But wait, isn't Mediterranean Grilled Bread an awful lot like last year's Bruschetta? And another Bistro conundrum, I have noticed that a number of the new staff have somehow disappeared. The much touted new cook, the new senior host and the new assistant manager have all mysteriously vanished! A word of advice: don't order the fingers!

My man Busta Bust about to do his thang

by LOKE

"Like those West Coast Niggas who be throwin up signs/I hate a Busta, unless his name is Busta Rhymes.

Tired of all that Gangsta bizness, the above Dove lyric found somewhere on De La Soul's, Stakes is High LP, best demonstrates the 'much love' Hip managed to keep everything raw? Cuz I got tha chance to meet tha motha* *a, dat's why!!!

The scene: the Sutton Place Hotel. The scenario: twenty-odd journalists such as myself squaring off against Busta and crew (note: no blunts where sparked and passed around during or after the interview).

The obvious first question is asked, "What is Busta Rhymes up to these days?"

The very articulate dread-locked rasta replies, "In constant motion,... always into something,... Busta never sleeps! I finished the new album (When Disaster Strikes) in five months and shot the video for the single (Put Your Hands Where My Eyes Could See). I don't have time to rest. I'm already five tracks into my next album! Five tracks!! It's gonna be called The that regard he has no competition. People have come up to me and told me that I'm a sellout. I admit he's not the best MC, but he knows the formula to make hit records... You could be the ILLEST MC wit the SICKEST flow, but if you don't make a bangin' hook or chorus, you ain't sellin any records... But to sum it up I like feel-good type shit, the type Puff is good at making... I like to party, my boy's like to party... I don't see why hundred dollar bottle drink at the bar. That's stupid, word... That's why my health is bangin' cuz I ain't drunk all day!!

I asked Busta what kind of impact his music has on headz?

"It's like in a fight when you get all pumped and I hit you and bust your shit. I'm past those days of fightin'... I'd rather bust your shit wit my music so you'll feel the same effect like when you get hit... I impact extreemly, like when kids are in a club and what many groups tend to neglect, live Performance. If you master all these points, you basically clamp down on the opposition, namely record execs and artist rep's.

We ended the discussion with Busta explaining his hobbies which, not surprisingly for a man who "Busts shit" includes tons of Martial Arts flics. He got all hype about a "must-see" Jet Li epic called, "The Kult Master", which has a crazy bald lady-monk Hop heads have for each other in giving props to those for whom its due. This certainly holds true for Busta Rhymes, a name synonymous with a) member of the defunct-for-now yet eternally funky Hip Hop group, Leaders of the New School; b) one of the illest-on-some-next-'ultrasonic' shit MC's in all the world; c) aficionado of all but the sickest Martial Arts movies ever made; and d) smoker of maaad blunts—hey, we all need inspiration once in a while. How you may ask do I know all these seedy somewhat private details of a Long Island b-boy who made good and yet Final World Front.

The next questions all dealt with the use of Puff on his album, which should have been avoided since I tend to think that an MC as ill as Busta doesn't need any Amos 'n' Andy entertainer like Sean "Puffy" Combs to sell records. I tend to view this Bad Boy popularity as a regurgitation of the "glam rock" bullshit of the 80's, which deprived millions of thoughtless teenagers from their senses into buying really empty music. As expected, Busta offered his own unique perspective on the matter,

"Puff's an entertainer, and in everyone's buggin out over it, the way I saw it was 'f**k it' he owed me, bottomline..."

When asked about all the generic junk Puff spits out in his lyrics, Busta was really straight-up,

"I'm not one to say that Puff should apply himself as an MC. It's all about how you take the music... Personally, I don't go into a club and buy a three-

I'm on stage performing, It's like BLAM! A sucka's gonna get hit up in his chest with my sound, makin'em FEEL IT!! He'll go home all happy."

Busta's advice for any up and comin rapper follows the acronym C.L.A.A.M.P.. Which is a philosophy he learned after many years in the Biz. Basically, it stands for Concept, Lyrics, Appearance, Attitude, Music and who wrecks twenty warriors with Tai Chi. Mr. Rhymes also enjoys Japanese Ninja Scroll, clever and ill flows, and the slow bum of a Red Leaf cigar rollie. In a world that has become a wave of regurgitated anthems and hits of years past, laced with mundane lyrics and sing-along choruses, the rap game still maintains its impact thanks to the realness of MC's like Busta Rhymes.

Pay attention to Sister

Jane Gorley

Late Night Catechism is a one-woman performance that blurs the line between theater and night school as a nun called Sister, played by Maripat Donovan, leads a mock night class in Catholicism.

The appropriate venue for this production, Holy Trinity Church, holds a simple set resembling a primary school classroom. The "night school for adults" premise is made clear right from the beginning as Sister gives possible reasons that people, (the audience), would be attending such a class - to become a godparent, to be baptized, etc. She also chastizes latecomers and anyone else who stands out, demanding apologies and replies and that the unwitting victims of her wrath stand up in front of the class to apologize.

The audience is encouraged to participate by answering her questions, (at risk of punishment), and raising their hands. While the "class" was initially reluctant, eventually Sister coerced several people into answering her questions by calling on them.

The performance is quite educational as well as entertaining; as Sister recounts the stories behind the canonization of several saints,

and we are asked to decide whether or not they deserve to maintain their titles.

She also informs that the term "immaculate conception" does not refer to Jesus' conception, but to Mary's conception in her mother's womb. The delivery of these fascinating facts is peppered with witty comments that reveal Donovan's talent for improvisation, but also suggest that she has probably come across every possible interaction with her numerous audiences during the impressively long runs of the show in other cities.

It takes a pseudo-masochistic person to enjoy the type of comedy that brings back memories of childhood humiliation and the authoritarian teachers that we all have experienced at one time, and to want to risk reliving those experiences. But if you're good at blending into the crowd and enjoy watching other people get embarrassed, Late Night Catechism will appeal to you, regardless of your religion or lack thereof.

Ticket prices range from $29.50 to $39.50 and can be purchased by calling (416) 872-1111 or (416) 348-0696. Performances are from Wednesdays to Sundays, and the show is running indefinitely.

It sounds hokey, but take advantage of Glendon's beautiful campus during the autumn. Go down into the valley and appreciate the fresh fall air, the beautiful coloured leaves, and the last remnants of warmth until spring.

Make use of Proctor. Glendon's athletic facility is a great place to work out, swim, or even just to scope out athletic types. In addition to the use of a prime facility, (good enough for the Raptors), you can meet actual adult types who have paid membership fees to belong to this exclusive club. Make contacts with dental surgeons and real estate agents. Plus, the showers leave you in control of the temperature and timing, unlike those push-button ones in high school and with better pressure than most.

Stay away from bacon bits. The indiscriminate use of these non-meat reddish flakes across this campus can only be detrimental to your health. Any so-called food product that can be kept out without refrigeration for months on end, (even used in the lovely pasta display on top of the salad bar in the caf), can't be good for you.

College Street West

The new dynamic quarter

Emile de Rosnay

In the last four years or so, the area along College St. - which starts at about Bathurst St. and continues to Clinton St. (near CHIN Radio) - has experienced dynamic change. This small community, part of greater Little Italy, had been developed by the Italian immigrants who came to Canada in the fifties. It helps to make Little Italy such a unique experience in Toronto.

Many of the original inhabitants have moved north of Toronto, so the community has changed - it has become more cosmopolitan. A gradual shift is noticeable as you walk from Spadina along College towards Little Italy. You'll notice the bustle of Chinese Toronto taper into a Kensington Market atmosphere - here and there a German Evangelical-Lutheran church, the old Fire Station number 8, the Portuguese Seventh Day Adventist Church, the Latvian House etc.... You'll see interesting alleyways such as Croft St., residential streets such as Euclid Ave; the characteristic architecture sits uncombed and overgrowing with vines, oddly mixed with the new structures that have been added. The old neighbourhoods that are so typical of Toronto just sitting on the edge of College St.

You'll start to notice, especially if you're there at night, that the area is lively and crowded, and that there are a lot of restaurants, bars and cafés. Such variety makes for quite an interesting experience if you're new to the area, or if you haven't been there for a while.

This night life alone is something to be discovered. The area attracts a lively mix of people coming from all over Toronto and abroad; students, artists, new age type yuppies and people in the 20-35 age group. Recently young Italians have rediscovered old haunts, such as Bar Italia. The owner of Corso Italia (next door to Bar Italia) says that he used come to the area with his father in the sixties, and that people come from as far as Woodbrige for a night out. Once mainly patronized by locals, the area now attracts people looking for the dynamism that this street offers.

Even in the last eight months changes have been noticeable. For example, "El Bodegon", which specializes in Peruvian cuisine, once resembled a cafeteria, and the clientele were loyal regulars. You could walk in on a Saturday night and be seated without a problem. Recently, looking for a reliable place on a busy Saturday night, I expected to find the same old "El Bodegon". Although we had to wait fifteen minutes to get in, we didn't regret it. The place hardly looks like a cafeteria now: a patio now flanks the side of the restaurant, and the whole interior has been redecorated, fitting in with College Street's cosmopolitan attitude. It still maintains its individuality though, and the menu has not compromised the general theme of the old menu; you can still get the beef heart, and bread on the side with a Peruvian salsa that will burn your mouth to hell.

Here are some other places that I suggest you try:

**Our Glendon Basketball team is participating in a tournament at the main campus from Monday October 20 until Thursday October 23. For more information call 487-6717.****

In Major League Baseball News:

*The Montreal Expos have confirmed earlier suspicions that their payroll will continue to be cut until the year 2001 when they hope to have a new arena. Players Pedro Martinez and Mike Lansing are likely to be traded as the Expos hope to sign younger players. They also hope that with re-alignment pending, they will be moved to the American League. During inter-league play this season, their highest gate revenues were marked when teams from the A.L. played at Olympic stadium. The Expos also announced that Sherman Obando is now a free agent after refusing assignment.

*The American League Eastern Series went to the wire as the defending World Series Champion New York Yankees were eliminated by the Cleveland Indians. While in the American League West, the Baltimore Orioles eliminated the Seattle Mariners.

*The National League Eastern series had the six time National League Champion Atlanta Braves taking on the Houston Astros. The Braves beat the Astros and moved on to play the winner of the National League Western Series which had the San Francisco Giants play the Florida Marlins. The Marlins won their first ever playoff series and move on to the NLCS.

*The final four teams remaining are: the Atlanta Braves vs. the Florida Marlins for the National League Championship Series and the Baltimore Orioles and the Cleveland Indians for the American League Championship Series.

*One day after the Florida Marlins were destroyed by the Atlanta bats, they have offered an excuse for their performance. It seems Alex Fernandez, their game two starter-who was rocked for five runs in two innings-has a torn rotator cuff in his shoulder. The Marlins have said that Fernandez is out for this season and maybe even next season as well.

*Major League Baseball saw 63 million fans attending games this season. It was their biggest increase since 1993 when 60.2 million fans went to see games.

*Brady Anderson led off last season's divisional series with a lead-off home run. This season, he led off the ALCS with a lead off home run. Ironically, Baltimore played Cleveland in last season's divisional series.

*The Philadelphia Phillies have announced that Danny Tartabull, Billy Brewer and Scott Ruffcorn refused assignments and have opted for free agency.

*The Anaheim Angels have announced that Craig Grebeck and Greg Cadaret have cleared waivers and have opted for free agency.

*The Minnesota Twins announced that they have acquired Joe Mays and Jeromy Palki as the players to be named in the Roberto Kelly trade on August 21.

*The New York Yankees announced they did not pick up the 1998 option for Tim Raines.

*The Cincinnati Reds announced that the 1998 option for Kent Mercker, Mike Morgan and Hal Morris will not be picked up.

In National Hockey League News:

*Paval Bure and Bret Hedican have worked out deals with the Vancouver Canucks. Their hold-out list remains at one-Alexandr Mogilny. The Canucks and the Anaheim Mighty Ducks opened their season in Tokyo, Japan. The week-end series was a big success as the games sold out in fifteen minutes. The series was set up to introduce the game internationally in preparation for the Winter Olympics in Nagano this February.

*The captaincy in St. Louis has changed hands again. For now, Chris Pronger will be wearing the 'C'. Long time Blue Brett Hull will not return to St. Louis after his contract expires.

*Paul Kariya has not reported to the Mighty Ducks as of yet. He is having contract problems.

*Alexei Zhitnik has agreed to terms with the Buffalo Sabres.

*At the end of last season, Peter Karmanos announced that his Hartford Whalers would now be known as the Carolina Hurricane. Congrats Peter, attendance is no better in Carolina than it was in Hartford. Only 6000 people showed up to the first ever game in franchise history. The excuse Gary Bettman gave, the team plays 70 miles from the city and the board knew that week day attendance would be low.

*Since the NHL lock-out, players salaries have increased on average by 25-32%.

*Hockey Town returns! Four months after winning hockey's most sacred prize, the Detroit Red Wings have had their achievement etched in stone, or at least in material. The Stanley Cup banners were raised high above center ice at the Joe Louis Arena at the Wings' first home game of the season.

*The Dallas Stars have re-signed Derian Hatcher to a two-year deal.

*The San Jose Sharks announced that they have agreed to terms with restricted free agent Jeff Friesen.

*The Toronto Maple Leafs announced their not so secret news when they named Mats Sundin as their captain. Sundin becomes the first-ever European captain in the NHL.

In National Basketball Association news:

*Alonzo Mourning of the Miami Heat will miss 8-12 weeks of the season. He recently underwent surgery to repair a torn ligament in his knee.

*Mugsy Boughs has re-joined the Charlotte Hornets despite doctors warnings. He has been playing with damaged knee cartilage and doctors say he is taking a dangerous route. Boughs rebuts by saying he knows how much pain he can take.

*The Golden State Warriors signed Isaac Burton, Dell Demps, Antonio Lang and Larry Stewart.

*The New York Knicks traded forward John Wallace to the Raptors for a 1998 first round pick; they traded the pick to the Portland Trailblazers for Chris Dudley.

*The Seattle SuperSonics signed Greg Anthony to a one year deal.

*The Dallas Mavericks signed Kevin Ollie to a one year deal.

In National Football League news:

*As the trade deadline passes, the first major trade in ten years occurred. The defending Super Bowl Champion Green Bay Packers traded Wayne Simmons to the Kansas City Chiefs for an undisclosed draft pick.

*Chad Hennings of the Dallas Cowboys is out for at least six weeks with a groin injury.

*The Tampa Bay Buccaneers signed Sean Landeta and placed Tommy Barnhardt on injury reserve with a broken collar bone.

*The Washington Redskins signed Don Sasa and waived Brian Walker.

*The Miami Dolphins signed Brett Perriman to a one year deal. They also re-signed John Kidd and Kyle Richardson.

*The Minnesota Vikings signed Duane Butler from the practice squad; they also placed Robert Tate on injury reserve with an injured ankle.

In Canadian Football League news:

*The Toronto Argonauts signed Dennis Montano.

FLYIN' BRIAN DEAD

Alison Sammut

On Sunday October 5, 1997, the World Wrestling Federation (WWF) lost one of its brightest stars. Brian Pillman was found shortly after noon in a Minnesota hotel room, dead of an apparent overdose.

At the age of three, Pillman was diagnosed with throat cancer. He recovered and went on to play professional football before joining World Championship Wrestling (WCW), at one point while with the WCW, he was a member of the legendary Four Horseman along with Arn Anderson and 'the nature boy' Ric Flair.

However, about two years ago, Pillman was in severe motorcycle accident in which his legs were broken. The WCW decided he was no longer a part of their federation.

When his injuries diminished, Pillman joined the WWF. He worked as a commentator for about a year before he returned to the ring professionally.

Since the accident, Pillman had been taking pain killers, he apparently mixed them with alcohol and that combination killed him. Pillman's final match was on October 4, he was to have a match at the WWF's 'Bad Blood' on October 5, against Dude Love. At the time of his death, Pillman was 35.

SEE YOU SOON SCOTTIE!

Alison Sammut

The defending National Basketball Association Champion Chicago Bulls were handed bad news this week.

Scottie Pippen, who has been an integral part of the Chicago Bulls five time NBA championship team will be out of the line up for at least two months. Pippen underwent foot surgery on Monday October 6, 1997 to repair soft tissue in his foot.

The injury was sustained in game five of the Eastern Conference Championship against the Miami Heat last season. Over the off-season, Pippen was told to rest, but the pain began again and forced him to miss his charity basketball game and the first few practices of the season.

"Each season we start off with some sort of challenge and this makes it even more so". Michael Jordan stated after a recent practice.

The rest of the team must come together and fill the role which Pippen will not fill for the next two months.

PLAYERS FIRST PUT TO THE TEST

Alison Sammut

After the scandalous Graham James trial this past January, the Canadian Hockey League and its three affiliate leagues-the Ontario Hockey League (OHL), the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League (QMJHL), and the Western Hockey League (WHL)-adopted a program entitled 'Players First'. The program was prepared by Toronto based sports lawyer Gordon Kirke. It was designed to weed out pedophiles and help players cope with sexual abuse. The program has unfortunately been put to the test a few months after its creation.

Ted Ahara, General Manager for the Kitchener Rangers of the OHL is currently on sick leave after the league launched an investigation into allegations that Ahara asked three teenaged boys to partially undress while being interviewed. All three boys are playing in the OHL but not for the Rangers.

Ted Scharf, President of the Rangers stated "It's a trying time for (Ahara) and for us as an organization. We have to put our players first. We have a lot of concern. We have to make sure that our players are in the best hands possible." Scharf also added that "there should always be a parent or a guardian or another adult present when you're with players at all times, when you're doing interviews or anything like that."

As for Ahara, the league has asked for his termination.
