

Union wants $10 fee raise to build students bursary fund

By Joan Shirlow

On Monday, October 7th, a fees referendum will be held along with the election of first year union representatives.

This referendum will ask if you want to pay ten dollars more to your student union, three dollars directly into union activities and seven into a bursary fund.

If the ten dollar referendum is passed, the total revenue of the union will be $24,300, or $27 per student, $17 of which you have already paid when paying your tuition.

The most expensive item in the union budget is the paper. Pro Tem costs $4,500 per year to print. Next in line is the Red and White Society, cultural affairs and Liberation week which cost $1,500 each. The union contributes $1,000 to the Glendon Forum on the Canadian Indian with the Forum program for the rest of the year cost is another $1,000.

The new feature of this year's budget is a bursary fund. There will be $6,300 in it.

Jim Park, president of the student union, said, "It's perfectly legitimate to ask students of the college to help other students, because there are good students here who just can't afford to stay."

There will probably be a three man board who will hear a student's case and then make a decision. Treasurer Tom West suggests a limit of $200 per case in order to help as many students as possible. But if a really desperate case came by, "we'd do as much as we could."

The bursary fund started out as a short term loan fund but this wasn't found practical.

West said, "I'm more concerned with the people who don't have the money and are forced to drop out due to financial circumstances beyond their control. These people wouldn't be able to pay us back. This is something the Ontario Student Awards Plan should be looking after, but it isn't."

People ask "Why don't they do something about it?" instead of "Why don't we do something about it?"

"It's a small step but in our own way we're trying to fill the gap," said West.

The only criteria that allotment will be based on is need. Marks will not be taken into consideration at all.

If the fees referendum is not passed, that is, if more than one third of the students vote no, several major cuts will have to be made in the budget.

West said, "We are essentially a student organization and we can only operate on the amount of money the students give us."

"If the referendum is not passed, the first thing to be cut would be the Red and White Society and the cultural affairs budgets because entertainment is not at all that high a priority. This means we'd be cutting down on organized social activities. We'd be slowing down life around here and the rest of the union would suffer." If the referendum is defeated, the bursary fund would be almost non-existent. A very needy student could be forced to drop out near the end of term, wasting an entire year

Reid says 'fire in your bellies' not enough to make successful revolution

By Bob Waller

Principal Escott Reid in his third annual speech to Glendon freshmen, last Monday told campus revolutionaries that they needed more than "fire in their bellies" to make a successful revolution.

Reid urged over 600 students gathered in the Old Dining Hall to undertake the changes needed in Canadian society and to make "this revolution with determination, with warm compassionate hearts, and with cool calculating heads."

Otherwise, he said, "your revolution will betray you and you will betray your revolution."

Reid expressed his hope that three or four years of education at Glendon would produce people who would have "more fire in their bellies, warmer and more compassionate hearts," and with minds trained to be coolly analytical in investigating problems.

Glendon's brief history over the past three years, and said that by 1976 Glendon should be a fully national college wherein both french and english would be natural media of communication.

He said that the "Glendon College experiment ... is succeeding, and that the necessary money for the experiment can be found."

To over 150 students at Glendon who are registered in the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, Reid has a well-chosen phrase: "You have not chosen greatness: you have had greatness thrust upon you."

The FAS students are scheduled to spend only their first year on the Glendon campus and will be following FAS programmes rather than the Glendon first year curriculum with its compulsory English and French. Reid also made first public mention of the Gardiner committee, which is doing a report on Glendon College for the Board of Governors.

He made it quite explicit, however, that this could only occur in an educational environment of "sustained disciplined intellectual activity."

This was interpreted by some members of the student union as a rejection of the considerably less-structured system of education that student union officers had been advocating during Liberation Week.

Regarding the student union manifesto, "A University is For People", Reid said that various sections of the statement had been sent off to committees of the Faculty Council for study.

Reid also announced that the manifesto would be discussed by all members of the college at an open meeting today at 3 pm in the Old Dining Hall.

Reid also talked about

It is scheduled to report in May.

York president, Murray Ross, was also on the podium with Reid. Ross, who has been away from the university for three months lauded so-called student radicals because, "they have forced a dialogue in the university about the university."

He warned against violent disruption of the university, but said that he was completely in favour of honest dissent.

Ross also stressed to the Glendonites that students are not and cannot be the sole preoccupation of the modern university.

He explained that he felt the university exists for the "preservation, development, and transmission of knowledge" and that to accomplish these goals a university has three functions: research, teaching, and community service.

Some questions for Mr. Reid

- 1) Will we become a national college before we become a learning college?
- 2) What is the difference between a bilingual élite and a unilingual élite?
- 3) Was Glendon College free three years ago? If so, could we set ourselves back three years?
- 4) Does greatness have to be predictable?
- 5) What is the relationship of Glendon College to society?
- 6) What is a 'liberal social democrat'?
- 7) No race-poverty in Canada, Mr. Reid? What about the Indians, the Métis?
- 8) What happened while you were in the diplomatic service, Mr. Reid? Where is the Regina Manifesto now?
- 9) What high schools have we built a constituency in up to now? Ridley College?
- 10) Could you be 'warm and compassionate', not aloof, with me, Mr. Reid?
- 11) Why don't you join us, Mr. Reid?

For President Murray Ross:

Could you please the 'world of knowledge'?

Liberation '68

After one of the most confusing weeks of their life, over 900 students are asking themselves what happened during Liberation '68. Virtually all students have registered in courses, despite Jim Park's plea. On this level, the union seems to have a monumental failure on its hands.

We do not, however, consider it fair to assess the Great Shake-Up week in these terms. Where the liberation program succeeded in the presentation of this alternative, and its consideration by the students.

A female ghetto

We would like to direct a complaint at Brian Bixley, the Master of Glendon's residences.

It is in reference to this institution's policy of not allowing women in first and second year to rent rooms in the basement of Hilliard Residence.

There seems to be no rationale for this arbitrary decision, although we have overheard comments such as, "well, there's no Don down there and ... you know ... its so accessible and well ..." or, "the basement rooms are nicer ... something to save for Assessment of the people-generated classes will have to be deferred until the inevitable casualties are known. Then the students will be able to gauge the rate of involvement and the intellectual success of this experiment, which, if we may say so, is 'Glendonian' to its very core.

What council has done during the last week, basically, is offer this college a foundation for a year's work -- a year's work which may determine the life or death of not only Glendon, but the liberal education ideal in Ontario.

those in third and fourth years."

As we said ... no logic behind the ruling at all.

It is a rather stupid assertion to say that because a female is not in a senior year, she will not be able to adequately control her morals or personal discipline.

That is none of your business anyway. In the interests of maturity and justice, PRO TEM requests that Glendon's administration throw out this ruling and open up the basement to all Glendon women on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Vous avez la parole

DO YOUR OWN EPISTOMY

Dear Sir;

Before starting in on the main body of this letter there are some things which must be pointed out.

The first and obvious point is that in the academic community where the written word rules supreme, this letter is pitifully inadequate because of its brevity and incomplete reasoning.

This letter is also based on two analogies, both of which suffer from their inherent tenuous natures.

The main analogy is between the family and the university, dealing with the concept of "in loco parentis". The glaring fact that these two social units have different aims and functions could very easily make the whole letter sordidly specious. However, I wanted to make a certain point and because I am a firm believer in contextualization, I picked the easiest and most comprehensible situation.

It is a shallow analogy, but it holds enough water for my purposes.

To further complicate matters, I will be discussing the family in ideal circumstances.

In any family there is a basic parent-child struggle, with deep tensions on both sides. There is a fair amount of ambivalence in both parties' attitude toward the other; caused by, among other things, fear of the future concerning both occupations and family bonds.

While the parent is interested in the welfare and training of the offspring, the offspring are continually pushing against the bounds of the parent's authority and rules to define new limits for their own actions and freedom.

In the ensuing arguments the word "independence" is frequently heard when the child decides, or realizes, what he wants to do with his life. The original tensions lessen and a different kind of tension takes their place.

First, we'll look at this new situation from the parent's viewpoint.

They have to some great measure been relieved of the shepherd functions and should be immeasurably relieved by this, as the relationship is now adult to adult.

But the important object in this is the offspring, who no longer considers himself a child but rather an adult. In fact the parent's feelings in this situation become fairly irrelevant to the offspring - or at least relevant in a new way.

In their new relationship, if the offspring is still in the family, he chooses one of the permutations and combinations of the following emotions - love, hate, or apathy - as his viewpoint. Now for the university and "in loco parentis".

The name is not too important but the actions and attitudes of a great number of students towards the administration are such as if it existed.

As I tried to demonstrate above, if you are still thinking in these terms the implications are that you still consider yourself a child, or at least don't know what the hell you are doing here or why.

As a matter of fact, if you look around you may find that this "in loco parentis" situation exists only in your mind.

SUPPORT FOR UNION

Dear Sir

This morning I noticed an article on the front page of the Globe and Mail which

Okay, so suppose you have reached this plateau where you know what and why you are in university.

The administration is possibly irrelevant to you and you will probably choose apathy as your basic emotion in the relationship.

Theoretically and morally this would be the ideal position for you to get really involved in setting up the boundaries of the students and administration due to intellectual cowardice.

I will let that statement sit where it is - ass-deep in assumptions.

In case you are interested, you have just run across more loose ends than you will find in a snake pit.

Suppose I say tactics for a moral combat. That is, if we are to follow ideals, it is very hard to hit above the belt if we placed ourselves below their belt.

If we raise ourselves to an appropriate height our vitality won't be sapped by thrusting our fist up the tortuous length of their body, but rather used to our advantage as we sock it to them on the jaw.

That last paragraph, by the way, is the type of reasoning I am trying to avoid.

It seems as if we are playing this big tactical game. It is a lot of fun, but the basic pattern of any game insists that someone wins and someone loses.

See Dwor, page 7

brought to light the Glendon College Union campaign to liberate university education from its archaic, inept role. Accordingly I write this short letter to illustrate my moral support for your extremely important campaign. I am delighted to see fellow-students interested in a vibrant, meaningful approach to education. Furthermore I'm satisfied to see you use a mature, progressive and NON-violent process to inform the student body and faculty of your plans.

As I'm sure you and the Glendon College Union are aware, it is going to be a long, hard struggle to obtain our "radical" goals; it is something that unfortunately will not materialize overnight. However, your success in putting your plans on a publicized scale cannot help but set the wheels of change in motion.

You may lose this registration boycott but I'm sure it will only be a set-back, not a defeat. As long as your campaign maintains the momentum it appears to have now, advances will surely be made. Private educational progress had already been achieved in the "people-generated classes" ideal, (for example in Canada there are at least Everdale School and Rochdale College).

If your campaign could ever break the conservative crust of public education, your group will have aided in one of the greatest ideological advances for better education.

May I end by offering you the best of luck in all future endeavors and I will continue to watch your campaign with great interest.

Hugh K. Clawson

The Saga of Frannie Freshette (an original poem)

By TOBY FYFE

On Sunday Frannie Freshette came
All keen to start her year,
Of Glendon College she had heard,
It's involvement and its beer,
It's activists and radicals
And administrative fear.

And so on Thursday afternoon
To prove she was ideal,
She went to seven classes
So as to get the "liber-fee!";
Why, she was so engrossed that
She missed her Versa-meal.

The week was all laid out for her
And she laid out that night,
To have a flaming love affair
That lasted til the light,
For she knew that involvement was
Her privilege and right.

Friday was athletic day
With lots of games to do:
Squash, volleyball and basketball
She played til she was blue.
And just to prove her involvement strong
She played boys' football too.

When Monday dawned so bright and clear
She toured from nine to four;
Six left from Proctor fieldhouse and
The library had more;
She swung and screwed til two that night,
The belle of the dance floor.

On Saturday on the notice board
She saw a classroom free
That would discuss "The Northern Yak"
In front of CTV;
"Man," she thought, "it will be dull,
But with cameras, it's for me."

On Tuesday a debate was heard
On freedom academic,
And she stood up at least three times
To comment well upon it;
(The only problem many felt,
Was that she was polemic).

Sunday was the final day
Of Liberation Week,
And Frannie woke up late for she
Was pregnant, pale and peaked.
"I think I drank too much," she thought,
"And was a trifle seek," *

On Wednesday there was more debate
On liberation classes,
And she stood up and shouted out
That all her profs were asses;
The radicals were very pleased,
And all at her made passes.

"But I know that the week was fun
And surely a success,
We got involved in everything
And I passed the francais test,
And we were taught that "teaching" here
Is not the very best."

On Thursday morning she was up
To pay her student fee,
And registered for courses so she'd
Soon get her degree;
But like all experienced freshmen here,
She knew reform should be,

And so on Monday lectures start
And Frannie dies to class,
With thoughtless, faceless students
Who just hide among the mass,
"To have thought involvement here was great,
But I'm glad the need is passed."

* sorry.

You have to have more than fire in your belly or you will betray your revolution and your revolution will betray you. (burp)

DÉCLARATION IMPORTANTE À PROPOS DES DEUX ANNEES OBLIGATOIRES DE FRANCAIS

Nous avons constaté à notre grande joie qu'il y a maintenant au collège un certain nombre d'étudiants francophones et d'autres qui, bien qu'anglophones ont fait des progrès considérables en français, d'ailleurs évidemment à l'excellent enseignement de notre département (!) C'est pourquoi nous nous proposons de tenter une expérience dont voici les principaux éléments:

1. Tout étudiant de Glendon doit pendant deux ans soit suivre des cours de langue française, soit être officiellement inscrit à un séminaire dont la langue de communication est le français.
2. Pour les cours autres que ceux de langue, le professeur en charge de séminaires peut refuser d'admettre un étudiant dont le niveau de français est insuffisant pour assurer une participation active en groupe.
3. Ces séminaires n'auraient lieu que s'il y avait suffisamment d'étudiants inscrits.
4. Pour cette année, le choix des séminaires possibles est le suivant:

Humanités	172
Sciences Sociales	172.3, 174.3
Philosophie	252
* Sciences Polit.	251
* Sociologie	251

* Bien qu'il n'y ait plus de place à ces cours, on pourrait constituer de nouveaux groupes s'il y avait suffisamment de candidats.

Nous rappelons que le cours de Sciences politiques 321 est donné en français. Les étudiants de deuxième année ont le droit de le suivre.

5. Tout étudiant inscrit à ces cours doit remplir une déclaration au département de français certifiant son inscription au séminaire qu'il a choisi. Si un étudiant cassait d'être membre de ce séminaire, il devrait automatiquement suivre un cours de langue au département de français.
6. Nous prions tous les étudiants intéressés de s'inscrire dans le plus bref délai aux cours mentionnés plus haut en spécifiant: section française, pour que les divers départements puissent prendre les décisions qui conviennent.
7. Nous espérons que ce projet sera accueilli avec enthousiasme.

Frost improving--but too slowly

By Tim Anderson

The inadequacy of Frost Library facilities is a Glendon cliché. The library resources have been bad for several years but very little has been done to remedy it. The background of the problem goes back to 1965.

The Frost Library was literally "raped" of its books in June of 1965 when a part of its collection was switched to the new Steacie Library at the York Campus. In a situation where a book would have been of equal value at either campus the decision went to Steacie.

It remained that way until the total number of volumes left in this library was only 45,000. Since that period the number has been rising very slowly. Out of a potential of 125,000 books there is now a total of 62,000.

Head Librarian is Brian Wilks, who holds a BSc and a MA in History from the University of Alberta and a Bachelor of Library Science from UBC. Wilks is also the Don of B House. Immediately when he started his work here this summer he was struck with the lack of communication between Steacie and Frost.

The relationship between the library staff at the York Campus and here was non-existent. The whole bureaucratic system was flooded with a deluge of memoranda, dead back orders and useless files. Before he even attempted the maze of paperwork, Wilks felt he should "get to know the people involved". He thinks that relationships on a personal level are vitally needed within the bureaucratic structure.

He attacked the details of the operation of the library during the summer. All back-orders were cancelled and he began comparing Frost's stock with the basic minimum of 55,000 volumes indicated in 'Books for College Libraries'.

He now is in the process of ordering the volumes that are lacking along with the prerequisite orders of the professors. Also Wilks is checking the Steacie Library for books that rightfully belong here but are lying 'dead'.

A problem that was apparent to many students was the fact that many books which were widely needed for research were just not available except by chance. This difficulty is supposedly corrected by the 'reserve system'. Long before the end of the school term professors are to hand in lists of books to the library that they suspect will be needed.

These books are then marked 'reserve' so that they can only be taken out overnight. The system is impractical, partially because of some professors' lack of foresight. Another reason is Glendon's un-stabilized faculty who, in some cases, cannot give adequate directions soon enough.

Regardless of the operational difficulties the library staff are confronted with at Frost Library, there is a feeling that Glendon will never have the library facilities required to offer its students the educational opportunities they need.

It has been suggested that the people who control the purse strings of York University have been far too wary of pouring money into Frost for fear of losing their funds. The Frost Library seems to be the unfortunate victim of university priorities. People like Brian Wilks are trying to change that situation.

Liberaction Week--too much, too soon, say freshmen

By BARB WORTH

How does a freshman react to an orientation week that not only offers a diverting selection of social events but also forces discussion on the nature of education, including the real value of a structured curriculum and the effects of formal evaluative processes?

How does he react when he is asked to delay enrollment in courses for a month so that he will be able to experience his first-ever period of tension-free learning?

By and large he listens to the discussions, asks questions of the principles in generally somewhat puzzled tones, and then goes ahead and enrolls in his courses just as he planned to do all summer.

Most freshmen last week felt that their necessary lack of any actual exposure to Glendon courses left them at a disadvantage in their decision regarding a delay in enrollment until Oct. 15.

"I cannot make a judgement on the system here until I have tested it myself," was the most common reaction.

In addition many of the freshmen seemed to be more concerned about the basic physical fact of assimilating themselves into a new environment.

With regard to the union-sponsored non-evaluative people-generated classes many freshmen feel that they are a valuable addition to the formal Glendon course structure.

Most freshmen questioned were very dubious about the possible value of supplanting organized courses. They did not consider the people-generated discussions as "serious study".

The mass meetings on Monday and Tuesday night of Liberation Week, caused consternation among the majority of freshmen.

Most felt that they were bound to become confused by the debate because they lacked the necessary factual background.

One freshman was bothered because the Liberation programme and especially the tactic of non-enrollment seemed to be a fait accompli. They felt that while this type of organization may have been unavoidable it left the impression that the meetings were more for the dissemination of propaganda than honest discussion.

Freshmen did feel, however, that the student union officers did an admirable job in introducing them to some of the basic problems of education in the university and making them aware of the need for critical thought in all spheres of university life.

My second biggest city

By VIANNEY CARRIERE

IROQUOIS FALLS -- I suppose that a long time ago, this town was the biggest city in the world to me. Now Toronto is my biggest city, and this place is just somewhere to come to when I have a holiday, when I get fed up, or when I remember that I have forgotten Iroquois Falls.

I will meet a lot of new people this year, and to everyone who is not familiar with Northern Ontario, and who is interested enough to ask, I will have to explain where this place is. At least, I derive a sadistic joy out of knowing that this year, I have a fellow sufferer from Iroquois Falls at Glendon.

There isn't really much point in explaining where it is. You are not likely to come up here, unless you become one of so many hundred tourists who make their way up every summer and fall on fishing trips, hunting trips, or simply passing by, looking for the falls that vanished 30 years ago when a dam was built.

Iroquois Falls is a pretty town. It was Northern Ontario's first model town, despite Kapuskasing's claiming the title, and although it is not very big by Toronto standards, (4,500), it used to be an important town. The Abitibi paper mill, which is the only source of employment in the community used to be the biggest paper mill in the world. Iroquois Falls boasts a golf course, and a municipal park where a long time ago, I used to pass the summers cutting grass and caring for flowers. (Actually, it sounds much more idyllic writing about it now than it did to me then.) There used to be a couple of tennis courts, but there is grass growing on them now, and people don't play tennis any more.

Most of the people here are simple. I'm sure they would object strenuously if they knew I called them that, but the word need not be used with a sneer. They are simple the way that all people who have lived in a beautiful country become simple. Their simplicity is the king that Mark Twain and Stephen Leacock wrote about before that kind of writing went out of style. Only a fool would hold it against them.

And the country here is very beautiful. There are no swimming pools, simply because we don't need them: there are four lakes within easy bicycling distance, and although not many people bicycle these days, it shows how close they are. Actually, I used to bicycle to the lakes all the time. It is hard on the way there, uphill all the way, but the ride back is beautiful. You hardly have to strike a pedal.

Well, that's Iroquois Falls, where I was born, and spent the first seventeen years of my life. I don't mean to eulogise the place. In all sincerity, I wouldn't go back there to live. Not for any length of time anyway. But it sure is a nice place to visit, in the summer, when the grass, I'm sure, is greener than Ireland, or in the winter, when the 'Stop' sign outside my window is fairly covered with snow. It must be pretty even by Toronto standards: no one I have ever brought up here had any complaints.

Really, the only trouble with the place is that no one knows where it is. But as I said, this year, the job of explaining where it is will be easier, since someone else has come to join me in the 'civilised' part of the country. Or perhaps I could explain where it is by saying that it is 30 miles from where Rick Schultz came from, and 40 miles from where Paul Gardner was born. That should settle it for everyone who knows Rick or Paul, but I'm not kidding myself. Iroquois Falls just doesn't exist for people in Toronto, and that's a shame. It seems that it might be the type of place where they would like to go to for a holiday, or when they are fed up, or when they remember that they have an Iroquois Falls they have forgotten.

Walk disastrous, smile shaky

Shrimp panics before first live audience

By LINDA MARTIN and KAREN FRASER

The Shrimp - so polished before a camera...

The Shrimp is a British version of the American Dream, a rural tomboy who found fame, fortune and glamour in the big city.

In Eaton Auditorium the glamour was rather scarce. Either the orchestra was highly professional and bored with the gig, or else it was totally lacking in ability. The meagre floral decorations must have been retired from Eaton's windows.

Miss Shrimpton appeared after several Toronto models. She was easily "as beautiful as her photographs." The audience was pleased. Then the Shrimp began to move; the most beautiful mannequin in the world was terrified. For the first time in her career she faced a live audience, not a camera.

Her walk was disastrous. The smile shook as she stared at the floor. Her pace was a modified run. Models following her gradually slowed the pace thus making her mistakes. The Shrimp knew she was terrible. The audience responded sympathetically with long applause. As a result her subsequent performances improved noticeably. The audience reaction was in contrast to the gloating, sarcastic reports of Toronto columnists. Miss Shrimpton wore the clothes perfectly but she did not display them.

A total environment show was provided by a fire in the balcony. This inspired an animal panic and ungraceful stampede by Toronto's best-dressed matrons and tennysoppers.

In spite of the chaos on the floor, the models on stage merely slowed their pace and continued the show. Their great presence of mind was tested again in a scene which should have been entitled "Shop at Eaton's for Quality" "Shop at Eaton's for Quantity not Quality". Three of six pieces of luggage used to display accessories refused to open. With an unmodel-like but effective bash on her case, mannequin Gilian opened the lock and kibbutzed a near disaster into a highlight of the show. The excellent professional work done by the girls compensated for obvious inadequacies in staging.

And the quiet Don still flows pollutedly on

By SIMON BELL

Rumour had it that our beautiful Don River was going to be cleaned up for good. It is said that Lady Simcoe once fished for salmon in the Don. But alas, no such luck. The Don will be an open sewer for many a year to come.

In the bad-old-days raw sewage was dumped straight into the Don because of a lack of sewage plants. Today, however, all domestic sewage and industrial waste is "fully treated" before it flows down the Don Valley.

Much sewage is also diverted to plants on the lakeshore. This is also the concept of a new plan fresh from the drawing board to be known as the York Central scheme. This scheme would divert sewage from northern townships such as Vaughn and Markham at the Don headwaters to the lakeshore. If the plan clears the red-tape stage it could be completed in five years and would generally improve water conditions.

Other forms of pollution have also helped to make the river what it is today. Run-off from our urban community, for instance, has a definite polluting effect. And then, of course there are those who find the Don a convenient disposal unit for their household trash.

Finally for those among us who wonder just how bad the state of pollution in the Don really is, an official at the Ontario Water Resource Commission commented that the water count changes like a toilet.

Kerr-Bevin battle looms over Wood damage payments

By Paul Darby

A quiet but determined battle over the payment of Wood residence damages is being waged between Residence Council president Bruce Kerr and Andrew Bevin, superintendent of the Glendon College Physical Plant.

Last year recorded damages to Wood Residence totalled $246.37. Of this amount the Residence Council has paid only $152.37. This amount represents the cost of bringing in labour and supplies outside of the college.

There was no argument from residence council against using the cautionary fund to pay for these items.

The bone of contention, however, is a bill for $94 which Bevin says would pay for the extra hours of maintenance staff labour spent in effecting minor residence repairs.

Kerr has refused to pay these labour bills, because he feels that the regular salaries paid to the care staff should take into account any general repair work they might perform in the daily course of their scheduled duties.

Bevin takes another view.

If we do believe in a community, then we must discard this notion as not being very conducive to real community action.

Suppose we go for a dance and be partners. Of course we must take the active role of the male. We ask them to dance; we lead them on to the floor and dance.

If you must play a part, picture yourself as the potentially potent seducer of a demurely selective virgin. Not too rough, not too soft - just right.

Or, to quote the Beatles, "Let's all get up and dance to the song that was a hit

He said that he runs on a tight schedule and that he must take his staff away from their regular work to effect unexpected repairs.

He said that money for such extra work is very limited and that he is unable to absorb all the costs of minor "vandalism" in his physical plant budget.

Bevin also said that his employees were all union members hired for specific tasks. Therefore, he feels that he has no legitimate power to ask any employee, except his one mechanic, to make repairs.

Furthermore, Bevin said that he could see no reason why the university administration should pay for damages he believes the students are responsible for. Presently labour costs run at $4 per hour.

However, Kerr feels that the residence students may be getting taken. A story that he is quoting often now concerns the drying-out of a certain Wood Residence fire-hose that was almost pressed into operation by an over-energetic group of residents.

To be dried out properly, the hose had to be turned over every so often. The final labour costs charged by Bevin's department amounted to $12. Kerr felt that this was ridiculous.

Bevin scoffed at the charge that students were being overcharged. He said that when the damage costs cannot be assessed to the individual or group responsible, he often absorbs a considerable part of the cost into his own budget under "Repair and Replacement."

The matter then goes no further, according to Bevin, thus saving a lot of money for the residence council and the cautionary fund.

But Bevin is becoming a little frustrated by Kerr's refusal to pay until it is decided in the first residence council meeting this year.

As he said, "If he wants the whole bloody works, he'll get it!"

Who should pay for this damage?

Davis announces expanded audit system for student awards

The Minister of University Affairs, William G. Davis, announced September 10 that a more extensive procedure for auditing student award applications is now being implemented.

The revised procedure is in accordance with plans outlined by Davis in the Legislature on June 8.

"We have attempted to ensure that the money allocated is placed in the hands of students who have financial need, not those who for any number of reasons would simply like to have such support," said Davis.

A substantial number of student award applications have already been reviewed, said Davis. He emphasized, however, that very few people attempt to obtain loans and grants unfairly.

The Canada Student Loans Act (1964), a federal statute, provides that any parent or student who makes false statements in a loan application may be subject to penalties.

In addition, false statements in loan-grant applications could result in the recall of the grant portion of a student's award and in the suspension of further grants for a minimum period of two years.

While the Ontario Student Awards Program has been developed to ensure that able students are not prevented by insufficient resources from completing their post-secondary education, Davis noted that the responsibility for providing the necessary funds rests in the first instance with the student and his family.

Eligibility for loans and grants is determined by objective assessment of needs and resources.

The more extensive audit system now being instituted should help to guarantee that award funds are being made to students on a fair and equitable basis.

Mexico students threaten disruption of Olympic Games

MEXICO CITY(CUPI) -- Mexico City College students have threatened to disrupt next month's Olympic Games unless they win concessions from the Mexican government in their two month old strike at the University of Mexico.

"We are not about to back down in our fight for democratic liberties now that we have in our favour the fact that each day is closer to the arrival of the contingents which will participate in the Olympics," leaders of the 88,000 students told a press conference September 10.

Thirty-seven Catholic priests issued a document calling for educational reform and agreeing with "the awakening of youth."

The students have not made public their disruption tactics, but rumors of everything from silent protest to violence fly around the capital city.

The students are demanding liberation of political prisoners, dismissal of three Mexico City police chiefs, disbandment of the riot police, payments of indemnity to those injured in earlier demonstrations and protection of university autonomy.

Although Javier Barrios Sierra, rector of the University of Mexico, has called on the students to return, leaders feel the strike must continue despite expressed sympathy with Barrios Sierra.

"If we do not take advantage of this Olympic period to settle our disputes we can expect a return of repression after the games are over," they said.

Bulldog's first test comes Saturday

By NICK MARTIN

The name Bulldogs has long been synonymous with the hard-nosed football teams of the University of Georgia. Now, another Bulldog team is preparing to take the field to seek its place in football fame. The York Bulldogs play their first game on Saturday in Sudbury against Laurentian University, and although York does not yet have players of the calibre of half-back Kent Lawrence or tackle Bill Stanfil of the Georgia Bulldogs, it still has a solid and what promises to be an exciting team.

Although the team has not yet been officially christened, the name Bulldogs is the choice of coach Nobby Wirkowski, and would seem to be the best name of those put forward. The other choices, such as "Yeomen", or "Red Knights", just don't embody the ideas of toughness and tenacity that the name "Bulldogs" does.

Coach Wirkowski is confident heading into his first game as a college coach. He plans to take about 40 of his 70 players to the game, but is quick to point out that he won't be making any cuts this year. "I'll be keeping as many as want to stay on the team," he said before Monday's practice. "Unfortunately, I won't have enough space to take everyone to the game."

Coach Wirkowski's decision to keep all those wanting to play on the team is an excellent one, and contrasts sharply with the situation at the U of T, where only 30 players make the team.

In his playing days with Calgary and Toronto, Wirkowski was a standout passer. Accordingly, he is building York's offence around the abilities of his two quarterbacks, Larry Iaccino and Wayne Clutterbunk.

"We plan to go with about 60% passing and 40% running, depending of course, on such factors as weather conditions and the game situation. At times we may even go with 80% passing, and only 20% running." Obviously, this will make for exciting football for the spectators.

Wirkowski still has not decided between Iaccino and Clutterbunk for his starting quarterback, and in fact will not make any decisions concerning his starting line-up until late this week, leaving all players every possible chance to impress. At the moment, the Laurentian game, and the game at Guelph, next Tuesday, are the only definitely scheduled games. However, at least three more games are likely.

One question which has kept recurring about the Bulldogs is the financial aspect of the team. Last spring, athletic department officials were openly pessimistic about York's chances of fielding a team, citing the expense of such a venture as the primary reason. Dr. Bryce Taylor, York's Athletic Director, said at the time that a varsity football team would cost around $45,000 the first year, and that to pay this much would mean having to cut back on much of the sports program.

However, Dr. Taylor said this week that the money for the team has come from the university administration. "The administration has apparently decided that football is an intricate part of the university." How did this effect the rest of the athletic budget? "Our only problem will be if any of our varsity teams go to the national championships. We would have to raise money for that somehow. Of course though, you can't really budget for things like national championships in advance."

A rumour currently circulating that off-campus interests donated a large sum for the formation of the team seems to be entirely unfounded. The athletic department has heard of no such donation.

Red Guards on the march

By NICK MARTIN

The Glendon Red Guards are ready. This is the word that comes to us out of their secret training base, hidden deep in the impenetrable jungles of the valley of the Don. Bob, "Crazy Feet", Hall-Brooks, one of the few survivors of the training camp, reports that the coaching staff of professors Bixley and Fowler consider the players ready for action after three months of grueling workouts and spartan existence. Their first soccer game will be taking place within a matter of days; that is, if anyone courageous enough to play them is found.

An exhibition game at Wembley Stadium in England had to be cancelled when their opponents, Santos of Brazil, failed to appear because their star, Pele, was afraid to face the Red Guards' defence. Any ex-Green Berets, ex-Vikings, or anyone else who thinks he's tough enough to play with this team, should get in touch with Bob Hall-Brooks in D309.

And you too, girls!

By SANDI STEVENS

If the number of women participants at Sports Day last Saturday was any indication of the over-all enthusiasm which is going to prevail throughout the year, Glendon women can look forward to a dismal year as far as the athletic program is concerned.

Approximately seventy people, mostly male, turned out to see the frosh thoroughly trounce the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th year students, not only in broomball but also in the annual Tug-of-War across the Don. It was unfortunate that Sports Day came at the end of an extremely busy week in which few people had much sleep. This fact could partially explain the poor attendance.

For those energetic types who did wander down to the Fieldhouse, demonstrations

Get off your butts, guys!!

By LARRY SCANLAN

For the glossy-eyed frosh, the pot-bellied sophomore, and even the upper-echelon third and fourth year men, the field house this year has prepared a salubrious concoction of athletic goodies. A full slate of sports activity is available for even the most diversified sports buff, as a quick glance at the athletic handbook will indicate.

As early as next Monday, the flag football schedule gets underway, and again this year, team organization will be up to the individual house or year, including the selection of team captains and formation of teams. So move it out already.

It is also worth remembering that to win any of Glendon's coveted awards, you have to get out and play in number. A house can be victorious in as many as four major sports and still lose the overall points competition. Similarly, on an individual basis, the emphasis is on participation, and not necessarily winning; all points accumulated by an individual are automatically included in his house's total.

But while you're out working off the beer, don't get too heated. Remember the bitter differences of opinion last year....Well, sports director Mike Salter informs me that a copious supply of autographed Seymour Wilson quick whistles are on the way. Referees headed by Ron Maltin, will be organized into clinics (take that, Vern Buffey) with printed rules for everybody and a general meeting for each sport. Henceforth, captains will hold tighter reins over themselves and their cohorts.

Team captains will also undergo close supervision this year with respect to that old banded-around point of equal time for all players, regardless of ability. Although an attempt at legislation of this kind failed to pass last year, the inter-mural council has decided to intervene in any case of discrepancy and 'advise' ACCORDINGLY.

Look for then, an extended, built-up programme, with more games scheduled, and on the college level, a still fatter agenda with the addition of McLaughlin College. And let's hope that our budding politicians on the athletic council will ensure that the Glendon inter-college hockey team will escape the ramshackle debauchery of last year, and retain the lost championship.
